

Abstract

The former Homestake gold mine in Lead, South Dakota, has been transformed into a dedicated facility to pursue underground science. The Sanford Underground Research Facility (SURF) includes two main campuses at the 4850-foot level (4300 m.w.e.) – the Davis Campus and the Ross Campus – that host a range of significant physics projects. Elements of the design and construction of the SURF laboratories will be presented.